

Scholarships

Online Classical Music Education
for all

iClassical Online Academy

a life-long source of musical inspiration

iClassical Online Academy helps musicians all over the world to perfect their skills and cultivate their talent: 360° all-round music education.

Tuition fees are affordable for most students. Nevertheless, along with our online learning platform experience, we found out that many classical music students in the world cannot afford the tuition.

The Scholarship Program

We have created a Scholarship Program for selected students who live in a challenging environment. It offers a full access to all courses and classes for a one-year period.

A contribution of US$ 200 gives 1 student access to a full yearly subscription.

Donors can choose the amount of students they want to support.

If they so wish, Donors can suggest students or leave it up to iClassical. Donors can also choose if they want to be nominated on a dedicated page of our Website. In any case, they will receive the names and e-mail address, with a picture, of the students they finance.

Selections of students

Students who are not recommended by Donors are selected through:

- Nomination by conservatories and schools
- Nominations from our Young Advisory Board
- Application form that students can send.

THE LATIN VOX MACHINE ORCHESTRA

A touching story!

Starting from 2017, the whole country of Venezuela fell into a deep financial crisis, which affected many fields, and Classic Music education and performance were particularly penalized. Many young musicians migrated from Venezuela to Buenos Aires, still not knowing where, and how to live. They kept on believing in music, and part of them gathered to form an orchestra, called The Latin Vox Machine. The orchestra didn't have a proper venue for rehearsing, nor a proper program, and started to play in urban areas like subway stops, and similar places.

“At the Jujuy station, violinist Fedosky Suárez plays Vivaldi while César Pérez, on the platform opposite, responds with his bassoon. Passengers waiting for trains applaud and throw notes into Suárez’s case. “Dude, you made my day,” said one. “ Buenos Aires Times

It was at that time that the orchestra made contact with South Korean music director Ahn Jooyong, who moved to Buenos Aires two years before, following a career in the United States. Someone showed him a recording of the Venezuelans playing, and he was instantly smitten.

“They are all incredible musicians. To train young musicians like them to become professional musicians, it’s my goal and my mission,” said the 66-year-old director. On October 9, 2017, the orchestra gave their first concert at the Golden Globe Theatre in Buenos Aires.

iClassical Academy was able through its Donors to guarantee full subscription to 22 selected young musicians of the orchestra, as a contribution to their musical preparation.

“We were so happy to be able to use the iClassical Masterclasses and we found them as good as some University courses. They are clear, simple and focused. The interaction between student and teacher is very good.”

Latin Vox Members

"The lights dim and the musicians start tuning the instruments they cared for along the arduous journey across South America, from Venezuela to Argentina. The speaker announces: "This is the Latin Vox Machine, an orchestra of trained Venezuelan musicians who have emigrated to Buenos Aires to escape the economic crisis gripping their home country." When the concert finishes, they are showered with applause from the audience, and even donations. "This orchestra is special because when we play together it's as if, for a moment, we were back in Venezuela," said 22-year-old cellist Veronica Rodríguez. "There is this energy that inundates the whole place when we're playing together. We're all from the same house, we're all siblings. I think that's a major influence when we're playing."

— Buenos Aires Times

Help iClassical support the young generation!

Join us in our commitment to support young musicians and become the protagonist of their music career !

Donate now

Questions?

irma@iclassical-academy.com | + 39 347 331 9474

iClassical Online Academy